CHAPTER ONE

Introduction

1.1 Background of the Study

The orphanage home is one of the numerous social institutions that have emerged over the years to cater for some of the social needs of orphanage associated with such problems.

Motherless babies have nowadays become common because of the moral decadence of the society. Young people who cannot cater for themselves find themselves put in the family way they end up finding abandoned those innocent helpless babies. The increasing hardship because of the present economic recession has increased the incidence of burdened family relationship and the consequent loss of firm control of family members.

This has tended as evidence by the increasing number of abandoned babies such babies have become the central focus of the orphanage home. The impact of orphanage home on child personality development that is the behaviour pattern of social behaviour on child personality development.

The research tries to compare children between the age of one (1) month to three (3) years that grows up in orphanage home to those that grow up with their parents. Children from the orphanage behave in a unique pattern thereby displaying some certain social behaviour attitude that could be associated with the upbringing in the orphanage home. I want to find out the positive and negative aspects of orphanage home on children personality development generally. Any baby that lost his or her parent especially the mother by what every means become mentally ill once it is discovered the illness is taken from the mother by the orphanage. Children abandoned in hospital or on the street are taken to the orphanage home.

Social welfare services and training of professional social workers of all categories. Social workers can succeed in making their contribution towards realizing their objective of government in improving people welfare only after they have keenly understood the problem. The causes and the effect of those people on the community. The dissertation is an attempt toward such changes taking place and their documentation. The study will focus on the impact of the orphanage home on child personality development in the later parts of his life.

The Kaduna orphanage home is the birth child of Jammiyyar Matan Arewa.

The Jammiyyar Matan Arewa itself is a social organization of northern women established on the 27th May 1963. It was aimed at unifying the women folk and providing them with a forum of welfare activities.

The organization was to be non-political and its membership was to be opened to all tribes, religions or social status at the very first meeting of the Jammiyar Matan Arewa which took place in the house of General Hassan Usman Katsina. A steering committee was set up to carry on the task of mobilizing women for the association and also to plan and organize fundraising activities to meet up the financial obligation of the association.

1.2 Statement of the Problem

Children brought up in the orphanage home cannot cope effectively with the outside world. This display in their dispositions because most of them tend to be introverts and always want to keep to themselves. In few cases they turn out to be backward in speed and verbal intelligence.

According to Sigmund Freud (1945) children who grow up in the orphanage home may be likely to be affected in their culture, tradition, and religion. Their interests, beliefs, ambitions, ideas, and soon thus affect the personality development as their behavior is not only more indiscriminate but more immature than those children who are with their natural parent. Hence the increase in various researches to find out the effectiveness and influence of these homes (orphanage homes) on the child's personality development.
