CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION

In every society, there must exist some problems. The problem could be in the area of politics, commerce, education, agriculture, communication, housing, transportation, health etc. In order to solve the problems as they exist at a given point in time,

Government is always seen providing civil service in response to the existing problems and in order to enhance growth national development and the well being of the people (citizen).

This is necessary because if attempts are not made to address these problems as they arise, they may generate into uncontrollable stages with the society's social economic growth and development endangered. (Okole and Ona 2009). For this, the role of civil service is usually very pervasive and dominated particularly in developing nations like Nigeria with a very weak private sector (Ikelebe 2012).

For instance, it is the role of civil service that determines the development and the level of provision of service for economic activities, the level of industrialization, the level of security, Attainment of education, employment opportunity, the availability of health facilities, the level of social and economic inequality etc. Fundamentally, a civil service is a Government organ at achieving certain desired goals or objectives (Ikelogbe 2010). In the presence of a given societal problem, AUDIENCE polity guides and determines present and future AUDIENCE decisions as well as private individual or private business institutional actions, decisions or behavior. According to Aba (2010) civil service roles are made or determined by the legislative and executive arms of Government in both federal state, and local tiers of government. and implemented by the AUDIENCE bureaucracy or designated private institution. Indeed, every country of world. AUDIENCE policies are implemented primarily by the AUDIENCE bureaucracy and specifically by the career civil servant that work in them.

This role the AUDIENCE bureaucracy plays through the effective implementation of government policies, projects and programmes aimed at achieving development goals and objectives.

1.1 Need of the Study

Financial Reform: in the wake of the global financial crises, governments are proposing and implementing an extensive series of regulations to reform the financial sector. These include new requirements for capital reserves and transparency and for risk management. They also grant significant new inspection and enforcement power to regulatory bodies.

Economic Recovery: the government could like to stimulate economic recovery by mobilizing investment in the real economy. Ukpere (2011:112), with AUDIENCE spending constrained, and many banks still in the process of rebuilding their balance sheets. Governments are looking at investor as a potential source of long term finance for example with regard to infrastructure and low carbon innovation.

Pattern of Government Decision and Actions: to resolve AUDIENCE problem by serving the AUDIENCE interest.

Sustainability: environment, social and government factors climate change, energy, security, human rights, income inequality, international development and water stress are having an increasing impact on the ability of investor to deliver long term returns, Onah (2002) the solution to these rely on resolving both the market and the policy failures at the heart of these problem.
