The title of the project is a "comprehensive Analysis of the effect of Regulation and Deregulation of Exchange Rate on Nigeria's foreign trade 1995 2000.

This project seeks to study why there is still no stable exchange rate in the country and how to rectify this problem.

Some of the objective of the study are

To determine the extent regulation or deregulation of exchange rate has contributed to stability in Nigeria foreign trade.

To provide useful recommendation based on the finding of the study

iii. To determine whether the criticisms on regulation and deregulation's are constructive.

Three hypothesis were developed to enable a through study of this research.

They are

There is a negative relationship between the rate of devaluation of the naira and the balance of trade .

There was a significant difference in the balance of payment position during the periods of complete deregulation and complete regulation.

iii. The foreign exchange policies of the periods did not improve non-oil export in Nigeria.

The main source of data used in this research was primary percentage and chi-square were the statistical tools used in testing the hypothesis .

After the text had been carried out it was found out that the exchange policies in 1995 2000 did not improve non-oil export in Nigeria. It was also found that there was an adverse relationship between devaluation rate and the balance of trade in the periods 1995 – 2000.

Some recommendation given in the project are

Government should play a more active part in implementing incentives to encourage non-oil export in Nigeria

There should be adequate consultation between the regulations and operator.

iii. There should be a political will by government to make the exchange rate policy in existence succeed.

In conclusion regulation and deregulation in themselves are not bad but if they are not implemented properly they will achieve the set objectives and achieve improved economic development.
