INTRODUCTION

1.1 BACKGROUND OF THE STUDY

Fixed Assets are those assets of a business which are of material value, like property, plant and equipment and other assets with relatively permanent life acquired by the enterprise for use in production or supply of goods or instructed with intention of being used on a continuing basis or for administrative purpose and many include items held for the resale or for conversion into cash in the ordinary course of business.

However, there are other long lived assets which we cannot see such ones are classified as intangible assets.

They are: Goodwill, trademark. Be it tangible or intangible all fixed assets represent a bundle of future services which are paid for in advance and used subsequently in the process of generating revenue.

Basically, in a bottling company, there are only three important stages to note down in records of the company as it relates to the fixed assets in liquidation. They are:

The stage of acquisition of the fixed assets

The stage of provision for depreciation of fixed assets

The third stage is the time of the period when the assets must have been useless for the company, then the management can then decide to sell it off and make replacement.
